Nargis has a dream to become a teacher, but she knows very well that until and unless her education is not complete she cannot afford to entertain her dreams which created a disappointment in her life. She belongs to a miserable class of family; her family income is around Rs 2000 per month, that is only earned through her father who works as a labourer, her mother is a Housewife, who lives in a family of nine members. Her family's starving condition led her parent's approach to Indian Dreams Foundation to get Support for Nargis's Education. Moreover, her Father could not afford her educational expenses, which had already resulted in a total waste of one year of Nargis's education. However, it was the effort of Nargis's mother which brought her to continue the educational prospect of Nargis's life once again. A major initiative was taken by Indian Dreams Foundation to include girls like Nargis as a part of their Honhar Ladki Program, to provide educational support to all those girls who are drawn away from getting their Right to Education.
